Farm-to-Faith: Increasing Healthy Food Access in the Faith-Based Community in New York City through Food Hubs

The Faith-Based Food Hubs Program of Cornell University Cooperative Extension New York City (CUCE-NYC) is designed to increase access to New York farm products by Faith-Based Organizations through MarketMaker. MarketMaker is an online resource (http://ny.foodmarketmaker.com) providing access to over 2000 New York farmers and their available produce. Food Hubs create distribution and networking locations for Faith-Based Organizations to receive fresher, healthier, and flavorful produce from New York farmers at reasonable prices. Each Food Hub creates a network with 6-8 additional churches. The “Hub” church collects the food orders, negotiates with the producers on price and delivery and organizes the volunteers every week to unload and distribute through the network. CUCE-NYC provides instruction and support to the “Hub” churches and assists the “Hub” administrators in scheduling and managing deliveries. All participating churches receive free MarketMaker training and nutrition education by CUCE-NYC. Currently, over 30 Faith-Based Organizations across New York City participate in seven Food Hubs which purchase thousands of pounds of fresh produce from New York farmers on a weekly basis. The purchasing volume averages $700-$1,000 per Hub per week.

Wallace Center at Winrock International Announces
Food Hub Development Grant Program
Request for Applications

The Wallace Center will fund Food Hub Development grants as part of their Strengthening Small-Scale Sustainable Farming and Local Food Systems by Accelerating Food Hub Development Program

The Wallace Center is pleased to announce its newest effort to support the work of food hubs nationwide, Strengthening Small-Scale Sustainable Farming and Local Food Systems by Accelerating Food Hub Development. The grant program will build on the significant work of Wallace’s National Good Food Network (NGFN) initiative to support food hub development and build capacity among small and mid-size farms throughout the U.S. to access regional markets, with an additional intention on building capacity among minority and female farmers.

The Wallace Center has released a Request for Applications (RFA) for food hubs interested in grant support as part of this new work. This grant program is available to both nonprofit and for-profit organizations. The application deadline is March 30, 2014.
